

Administrative Challenges and Practices of Civil Service Reform Implementation: The Case of Haro Limu District in Oromia Region

Lelisa Kebede Tolera

Department of Civics and Ethical Studies, College of Social Science and Humanities, Mettu University, Mettu, Ethiopia

Email address:

lalisakebede056@gmail.com

To cite this article:

Lelisa Kebede Tolera. Administrative Challenges and Practices of Civil Service Reform Implementation: The Case of Haro Limu District in Oromia Region. Humanities and Social Sciences. Vol. 9, No. 6, 2021, pp. 251-257. doi: 10.11648/j.hss.20210906.16

Received: October 15, 2021; Accepted: November 11, 2021; Published: November 24, 2021

Abstract: Civil service reform is wide ranging areas of public administration adopted by developed and developing countries. This is due to ever increasing change in economic, social, political, and technological environment has demanded more efficient and effective management systems. However, the implementation process of the reform tends to become complex because of various institutional challenges. The main objective of this study is to examine administrative challenges in the implementation of civil service reform in Haro Limu District. In order to achieve this objective, descriptive research design and combination of quantitative and qualitative research approach was employed. In this study, the researcher used both primary and secondary sources of data. Primary data were gathered through questionnaire, interview and focus group discussion while secondary data were gathered from books, journals, articles both published and unpublished and official documents from Haro Limu District. Questionnaires were distributed and administered by the researcher with the help of enumerators. Structured questionnaires were filled by the sample respondents from five selected civil service sectors. Interviews were conducted with five management officials from five selected public offices to attain profound information. Similarly, FGD was conducted with employees selected purposively from civil service sectors. Data collected from different sources were analyzed and interpreted through quantitative and qualitative techniques. The finding of the study identified some interrelated administrative challenges in the implementation of CSR in the study area. These are low commitment and competency of management officials and employees; lack of accountability and professionalism; low recognition of reform standards; lack of fair selection, evaluation and promotion of employees; lack of advanced measurement standards; lack of adequate training, lack of incentives and rewards for good performers and lack of regular supervision and monitoring. Based on the identified problems, the following possible recommendations were provided. Strengthening capacity building, enhancing the cooperation between management officials and employees, ensuring accountability of management officials and employees, enhancing human resource management, allocating adequate budget, promoting effective communication between public sectors and strengthening regular supervision and monitoring for the effective implementation of civil service reform in the study area.

Keywords: Civil Service Reform, Implementation, Administrative Challenges and Practices

1. Introduction

Civil service reform is the most comprehensive areas of public administration adopted by both developing and developed countries of the world. The ever increasing change in economic, social, political, and technological environment has demanded more efficient and effective management systems [1]. This in practice, led to the need for the governments to implement civil service reform to reduce the cost of the civil service and create skilled and efficient workforce which is critical for governance, production and distribution of public goods and services, formulation and implementation of economic policy, and management of public expenditure [2].

Despite its global spread, the implementation process of CSR became complex due to different reasons like rearranging difficult human configurations and changing human behavior [3]. In addition, most of African countries are forced to implement civil service reforms under the guidance of international organizations like WB and IMF and the prevalence of socio-political upheavals which in turn resulted in institutional incapacity [4]. In Ethiopia the purpose of reforming the old civil service system under FDRE was to avoid the undesired practices that hindered effective and efficient public service delivery and to maintain civil service system with the changing circumstances. Thus, in realizing this objective, the current government of Ethiopia had adopted three important and comprehensive policy reforms; changing the political ideology from socialist to federal system; building a capable civil service to provide citizens with friendly service delivery, and improving quality service delivery which is still under process [5].

Despite the above stated policy reforms, the implementation of civil service reform in Ethiopia in general and Oromia Regional State in particular face several challenges. In relation to this, different researches have been conducted. For instance the study entitled “The Implementation of Civil Service Reforms in Ethiopia: The Promise for Civil Service De-Politicization of Tigray National Regional State” identified that regardless of the institutional framework in place, the implementation of CSR in the country was highly inhibited by political interference [6]. This and other researches have been more focused to the urban center administration rather than distant and rural administration of civil service reform. Thus, this study was aimed to exhaustively examine the administrative challenges and practices of civil service reform implementation in rural areas like Haro Limu district.

2. Materials and Methods

2.1. Research Design

For the purpose of this study, descriptive research design was employed. The rationale of employing descriptive studies stems from the fact that such studies describe the state of affairs as it exists at present [7]. In addition, the researcher used combination of both quantitative and qualitative research approaches since these approaches provide a researcher with a pool of data that gives broad base to the findings of the study and helps the study to be more valid, reliable, and dependable [8].

2.2. Sources of Data

To attain the objective of this study, both primary and secondary data has been used. The Primary data was gathered from sample respondents and secondary data was collected from books, journals, published and unpublished articles, and official documents from the study area.

2.3. Study Population and Sample Size

Study Population: Study population is an aggregation of elements from which the sample is actually selected. Accordingly, the study population of this study was all permanent employees which are currently working in five public offices of Haro Limu district. Sample size: for this study 103 employees were selected by simple random sampling method. In addition, five employees were sampled purposively from the selected five offices of the district.

2.4. Method of Data Collection

For the successful achievement of its objectives this study employed questionnaire, interview and focus group discussion as instruments of collecting data from primary sources. Besides the researcher reviewed different materials for collecting data from secondary sources.

2.5. Method of Data Analysis

Data collected from primary and secondary sources were recorded, edited, organized, analyzed, interpreted and presented in relation to research questions. The data collected through questionnaire was analyzed quantitatively by using descriptive statistical tools such as tables, figures, percentages, graphs and charts, whereas data collected through interview and focus group discussion was analyzed qualitatively.

3. Administrative Challenges in the Implementation of Civil Service Reform in Haro Limu District

3.1. Low of Commitment and Cooperation of Management Officials and Employees

The Figure 1 below indicated that 14.1% of the respondents replied ‘yes’ and majority (80.8%) of respondents replied ‘no’ on whether management are committed in the implementation of CSR. While the rest 5.1% of respondents replied as they are not sure of whether top management officials are committed or not to the implementation of civil service reform. On the same issue, one of the key informants from civil servants (March, 2016) said that, “.... top management officials are not commitment since they have no clear understanding on the importance reform program”.

In addition, as the key informants from management officials suggested the commitment of civil servants on the implementation of reform process is not as it is expected. This is due to lack of understanding about the purpose of the reform program and lack of rewards and initiative environment. As focus group discussants said, unequal benefit among civil servants working in different sectors by having equal academic status is the major cause for the low commitment of civil servants towards civil service reform.

Therefore, one can say that low commitment of top management officials and civil servants is a considerably affecting implementation of civil service reform in Haro Limu district.

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

Figure 1. Respondents' Opinion on Management Official's Commitment.

Table 1. Respondents' Opinion on Cooperation between Management Officials and Employees.

Item	Responses	Frequency	Percent
How do you think the cooperation between management officials and employees regarding civil service reform implementation?	V. High	---	---
	High	7	7.1
	Medium	31	31.3
	Low	43	43.4
	V. Low	18	18.2
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

The above Table reveals that, 7.1%, 31.3% and 43.4% of respondents replied high, medium and low on the level of cooperation between management officials and employees. The rest 18.2% of the respondents replied as the cooperation between management officials and employees is very low. In consistent with the above question, the FGD participants also commented that, management bodies give more focus to the political accountability than civil service reform program. This result in mistrust between the two bodies and employees are ceased to closely work with top management officials. In other words there is no mutual understanding between some management officials and employees due to some officials consider themselves as boss rather than coworkers. From the above responses we can conclude that, low cooperation between civil servants and management officials affects the implementation CSR implementation in the study area.

3.2. Low Competency of Management Officials and Employees

Competency of management official is one of the most important factors to increase agency effectiveness [9]. In connection with this, survey result on the above Table 2 shows, 41.4% and 49.5% of the respondents replied Yes and No on the issue whether management officials are competent enough in performing all responsibilities given to them. The rest 9.1% of the respondents replied as they don't know whether management officials are competent enough or not. In addition, FGD participants suggested that, most top management officials are not competent in executing their duties. They commented different reasons for the incompetency of management officials like political loyalty, personal relationship and year of experience rather than academic status as criteria when coming to management position. They said that, there are peoples on management position with diploma level.

Table 2. Respondents' Opinion on the Competency of Management Officials.

Items	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Do management officials competent enough in performing all responsibilities expected from them?	Yes	41	41.4
	No	49	49.5
	I don't know	9	9.1
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's own survey results, March 2016.

Regarding the competency of civil servants, key informant interviewees suggested that, there are many people waiting for the support of other person in performing his/her duties or try to make their duty of another person. In this condition it is difficult to realize the reform program in general and in the study area in particular.

3.3. Lack of Accountability and Professionalism

Accountability is the answerable to once own action or decision. Decision makers in public institutions, private sector and civil society organizations should be accountable to the public as well as to institutional stakeholders [10]. In accordance with this top management officials need to be asked for their wrong doings before the court.

Table 3. Respondents' Opinion on the Accountability of Management Officials.

Items	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Do management officials accountable for failure of their activities?	Yes	41	41.4
	No	51	51.5
	I don't know	7	7.1
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's own survey results, March 2016.

As shown in the Table 3 above, 41.4%, and 51.5%, of the respondents replied yes and no respectively on the accountability of management officials. The rest 7.1% of the respondents have no idea on whether management officials are accountable or not. In addition, participants in FGD stated as the management officials are not accountable for their misconduct and failure of their activities. One focus group discussant told that, "...the accountability of management officials in public office is not as much as it is told orally. Practically I didn't see when officials are punished for their misconduct; even when their wrong action is exposed". From this we can deduce that implementation of CSR reform is affected by low accountability of management officials in the study area.

Source: Researcher's own survey results, March 2016.

Figure 2. Respondents' Opinion on professionalism in office.

As indicated by figure above, only 37.4% of the respondents replied 'Yes' and the rest 62.6% replied 'No' regarding presence of professionalism in their respective office. In addition most of the FGD and interview participants suggested as their place where they work, is irrelevant with their area of qualification. Thus it is possible to say that inconsistency of employee's qualification and the duty they have in office unquestionably affect the implementation of CSR in the study area.

Table 4. Respondents' Opinion on Selection of Employees.

Item	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Is the selection of employees based on merit system?	Yes	47	47.5
	No	52	52.5
	Total	99	100
If your answer is 'No' on the above question, is it based on;	political view point	20	38.5
	Personal	32	61.5
	Relationship	---	---
	Giving Bribe	---	---
	Total	52	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

3.4. Lack of Fair Selection, Evaluation and Promotion of Employees

Employees' selection based on merit system is related with seeking out the most talented citizens in a fair and open competition. It is the best mechanism for obtaining potential candidates in sufficient numbers and quality that can realize the organizational objectives [11]. This is due to having adequate manpower, careful management of human capital is also important for the implementation of civil service reform. This includes appreciating employees' values which is critical for the creation of an efficient workforce that can properly implement the reform program [12]. Thus, building a motivated and capable civil service requires merit-based and nondiscriminatory recruitment, which rests on the absence of political patronage, open competition and selection by an independent agency [13].

As the above Table indicates, 47.5% of the respondents answered 'Yes' and 52.5% respondents replied 'No' on whether employees' selection is based on merit system. Respondents whose answer is 'no' were again requested to answer the other criteria up on which the selection of employees is based. Accordingly, 38.5%, 61.5% of the respondents replied political background and personal relationship respectively.

In contrast, some of the key informant interviewees from management officials have suggested that the selection of employees is fair and based on open competition. Here the response gained from civil servants through questionnaire survey and management officials through personal interview is almost contradicting each other. Furthermore, FGD participants were also requested to explain the same issue during discussion and majority of the discussants point out on the existence of problem regarding employees' selection. On this issue one discussant (March, 2016) said that, "...there are some individuals who were employed without having any academic status. If the employees' selection process is really based on applicant's competency and open competition, there is no way the person to be hired without having legal documents in public office". Vacancies may be filled through recruitment, promotion, and transfer on the basis of the human resource plan and there shall be no discrimination among job seekers in filling vacancies because of their ethnic origin, sex, religion, political outlook, disability or any other ground and a vacant position shall be filled only by a person who meets the qualification required for the position and scores higher than other candidates [14]. Thus based on the above stated evidence and legal principles unfair selection of employees is factor affecting implementation of civil service reform in Haro Limu district.

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

Figure 3. Respondents' Opinion on Evaluation and Promotion of employees.

As it is shown by the above figure 3 only 28.3% of the respondents replied as the evaluation and promotion of public employees is fair, whereas 69.7% of respondents replied it is not. The rest 2% of the respondents failed to say 'Yes' or 'No' whether the evaluation and promotion of public employees is fair. In connection with this, one discussant argued that "...most of the time our performance evaluation is not fair and hence didn't show us our exact strength and weakness. Thus our promotion is also determined in accordance with the way we were evaluated." From the above view point one can easily understand as unfair evaluation and promotion of civil servants exist in the study area which in turn affect the implementation of civil service reform.

3.5. Lack advanced Performance Measurement Standards

Accordingly the performance of employees working in public office cannot be judged good or bad without the establishment of this measurement criterion such as punctuality, relationship with customers and daily performance in the public offices [2].

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

Figure 4. Respondents' Opinion on performance indicators.

As the result from the above Figure indicates, the majority of the respondents have negative inclination on the presence of advanced measurement standards. Only 30.3% respond positively. In relation to the above question, most of the focus group discussants suggested that measurement standards in their offices are poor and they were being evaluated by the old standards [4]. Setting performance measurement criterion for activities in the public sector is a difficult task due to incapacitated and de-motivated civil servants, lack of facilities and poor information systems. As the result, lack of advanced performance measurement standards is one of the major factors affecting the implementation of civil service reform in the study area.

3.6. Lack of Incentives and Rewards

Incentives are regarded as variable payments made to employees or a group of employees on the basis of the amount of output or results achieved. Alternatively, it could be payments made with the aim of pushing employees' performance towards higher targets or to employees' attainment of some standard [15]. In civil servants/staffs are under paid and under rewarded; hence the system does not attract and retain skilled human power [16]. As a result, the presence of incentives or rewards for employees determines the effectiveness of civil service reform implementation.

Table 5. Respondents' Opinion on Provision of Incentives for Civil Servants.

Item	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Is there incentive or reward provided for civil servants performing their duties in your office?	Yes	--	--
	No	99	100
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

As the result from Table 5 shows, all of the respondents replied as there is no any incentive and reward provided for civil servants for properly performing their duties. Furthermore, most of the key informant interviewees suggested that, no one is rewarded for his/her high performance till now. Such kind of working conditions makes the hard workers only to use their minimum effort in executing duties. Thus it can be concluded that absence of incentive and reward for employees for their higher achievement is affecting the implementation of civil service reform in the study area.

3.7. Lack Adequate Training for Employees

Training is best seen as incentive which can enhance organizational commitment, team effort, and customer relations. It is important for employees to realize that organizations are showing an enhancement of their skills. Through proper training, employees will have an in-depth understanding of their tasks [17]. In addition, training improves the knowledge, skill, behavior, and attitude of civil servants towards the requirement of the job and the organization. It is one of the best mechanisms to promote learning using systematic and planned instruction activities which involves the use of formal processes to impart knowledge and help public employees to acquire the skills necessary for them to perform their jobs satisfactorily [18]. Thus, the absence of adequate training for public servants seriously affects the implementation of civil service reform.

Table 6. Respondents' Opinion on Training.

Items	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Are you given adequate training on civil service reform implementation?	Yes	34	34.3
	No	65	65.7
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

As the above Table 6 shows, only 34.3% the respondents replied positively and the highest percent of respondents (65.7%) replied as they were not provided sufficient training on civil service reform implementation. In addition, key informants and focus group discussants also confirmed as civil servants were not given adequate training due to lack of finance for training and lack trainer on the reform program. Thus, based on the above data it is possible to conclude that, even though training has a great importance, civil servants/employees were not given regular training on civil service reform implementation in Haro Limu district.

3.8. Lack of Effective Communication, Supervision and Monitoring

Table 7. Respondents' Opinion on Effective Communication among public sectors.

Items	Responses	Frequency	Percent
Is there effective communication between public sectors on civil service reform?	Yes	24	24.2
	No	75	75.8
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Results, March 2016.

As it can be observed from the above Table 7, regarding whether there is effective communication, 24.2% of the respondents said 'Yes' and 75.8% of them replied 'No' on the existence of effective communication between public sectors on civil service reform. Besides, majority of the key informants suggested that public sectors communication is poor and irregular in working together to realize the reform program. Thus it is possible to say lack of effective and regular communication between public sectors on civil service reform is a major problem for the implementation of civil service reform in the study area.

Table 8. Opinion of Respondents on Supervision and Monitoring.

Item	Response	Frequency	Percent
Is there regular supervision and monitoring on civil service reform?	Yes	34	34.3
	No	65	65.7
	Total	99	100

Source: Researcher's Own Survey Result March, 2016.

As it is shown in the above Table, 34.3% of the respondents replied there is regular supervision while the greater percent (65.7%) of the respondents replied there is lack regular supervision and monitoring on civil service reform. This data shows that there is poor supervision and monitoring on the implementation of civil service reform in the study area.

4. Conclusion

Based on the above discussions of the presented data, the following conclusions were made regarding the challenges in the implementation of CSR in Haro Limu district. Accordingly, this study identified that low commitment and low competency of top management officials and civil servants, and low cooperation between management officials and employees as problems hindering implementation of reform program in the study area. The findings of the study also revealed that due to lack of professionalism, lack of fair selection, evaluation and promotion of employees, and lack advanced measurement standards implementation of civil service reform is delayed in Haro Limu district.

Moreover, the study identified lack of adequate training, lack of incentives or rewards for employees, lack of effective communication between public sectors and lack of regular supervision and monitoring as considerable challenges affecting civil service reform implementation in the study area.

5. Recommendations

Since implementing civil service reform is difficult without the proper understanding and commitment of both top management officials and civil servants, strengthening capacity building is necessary. This includes enhancing commitment of management officials and employees, enhancing cooperation between top management officials and employees as well as between public sectors. In addition, ensuring the culture of accountability among public officials and public employees also need to be promoted. To this effect, the district and zonal administration should work together on training and awareness creation activities.

Enhancing human resource management by hiring employees based on merit system; appreciation of the employee's value, practicing fair evaluation and promotion of employees and rewarding of good performers in their respective activities are other ways that implementation of CSR can be realized. In addition since, implementing civil service reform without sufficient budget is unthinkable. Thus, Finance and Economic Development Bearou of the region in collaboration with MoFED should allocate adequate budget for civil service reform implementation. Finally this study point out that, strengthening regular supervision and monitoring as another important issue to be given consideration in realizing the civil service reform in the study area.

References

- [1] Solomon Markos, 2013. Civil Service Reform in Ethiopia: Issues, Lessons, and Future Directions. International Journal of Public Administration, 36: 4, 235-247.
- [2] Emmanuel Lukumai, C, 2006. The Implementation of Civil Service Reforms in Tanzania, from 1991-2000: University of Bergen, Norway, Master's Thesis June 2006. Unpublished.
- [3] Rahman, A. T. Rafiqur, 2001. Reforming the Civil Service for Government Performance: A Partnership Perspective, Dhaka: The University Press.
- [4] Paulos, C. (2001). The challenges of the civil service reform in Ethiopia: Initial observations. East Africa Social Science Research Review, XVII, (pp. 79-103).
- [5] Abeje Tafere and E. A. Narayana, 2015. Civil Service in Amhara National Regional State, Ethiopia; Public Policy and Administration Research; Vol. 5, No. 2, 2015 (pp. 51-58).
- [6] Gebre Miruts and Melesse Asfaw, 2014. The Implementation of Civil Service Reforms in Ethiopia: The Promise for Civil Service De-Politicization of Tigray National Regional State. Developing Country Studies Vol. 4, No. 7 (pp. 91-105).
- [7] C. R Kothari 2004. Research Methodology; Methods and Techniques, New Age International (P) Ltd., Publishers.
- [8] J. W. Creswell, V. L. Plano Clark, 2007. Designing and Conducting Mixed Methods Research. Sage Publication University of Nebraska Lincoln, New Delhi, India, 2007.
- [9] Rainey, H. G., & Steinbauer, P. 1999. Galloping elephants: Developing elements of a theory of effective government organization. Journal of Public Administration Research and Theory.
- [10] Kassahun Yirga, 2010. Assessment of the Prevalence of Good Governance in the Public Sector: the Case of Public Institutions in Debre Birhan Town. May, 2010 Mekelle (MA thesis unpublished).
- [11] Libanos, et al. 2014. The Implementation of Recruitment and Selection in Civil Service Institutions of Oromia National Regional State, Ethiopia, Journal of Environment and Earth Science Vol. 4, No. 13, 2014 (pp. 61-67).
- [12] Jungin Kim 2013. Factors Influencing Human Resource Professionals' Perceptions of the Effectiveness of Civil Service Reform in Six U.S. State Governments; The Korean Journal of Policy Studies, Vol. 28, No. 1 (2013).
- [13] M. Satish, 2004. Civil Service Reforms Centre for Good Governance, Hyderabad November 2004.
- [14] Federal Democratic Republic of Ethiopia Civil Servants Proclamation No. 515/2007.
- [15] Dalita Balassanian, 2006. Incentive Systems: Incentives, Motivation and Development Performance a UNDP Capacity Development Resource Capacity Development Group Bureau for Development Policy United Nations Development Programme November 2006. Conference paper #8 working draft, November.
- [16] Ministry of civil service, 2013. The civil service program in Ethiopia, April 2013, Addis Ababa.
- [17] Ibitoye A. Dickson, et al, 2014. Training and Manpower Development in Public Research and Development Organizations: International Journal of Academic Research in Management (IJARM) Vol. 3, No. 3, 2014, Page: 257-275, ISSN: 2296-1747 Helvetic Editions LTD, Switzerland. www.elvedit.com
- [18] Mengistu Zeleke, 2014. The practice and problem of human resource development and training at vision Ethiopia; congress for democracy training institution June 2014.